El Paso area Veterans or their dependents are encouraged to sign up for free occupational training

~~ Learning how to build a computer and can keep it for personal use ~~

(El Paso, TX August 2019) Thanks to a partnership between EHN's Veterans One Stop Center, El Paso Community College (EPCC) and the Texas Health and Human Services Commission veterans in the El Paso area or their qualifying dependent can sign up for free occupational training where they will learn how to build and operate their own computer, then can call it their own.

"We are so excited about this initiative. This type of training is priceless in our day and age, so the fact that these veterans or their loved ones can learn how to build a computer along with the other skills training is so valuable," said Kellie Franco, EHN Veterans Services Manager. "What makes this program even better is the participants keep the computer for their personal use."

The Texas Health and Human Services Commission helped provide funding for the occupational training offered at EPCC through its Computer Hardware and Employability Skills Training course. Classes will also provide Veteran's with skills on how to update their resumes and participate in mock interviews. "The goal is to get our veterans ready for the workforce and this opportunity is a great start," added Franco.

Space is limited. To register call the EHN Veterans One Stop Center at 915-747-3590
